SOIL CONSERVATION SERVICE,

Guide to Field Activities

MAY 1, 1940

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE LIBRARY

De fen One is essentially a matter of

Again federal, and local effort to relieve social and economic pressures which cause land abuse, the Soil Conservation Service is helping farmers to make constructive changes in the physical treatment of their land.

These changes involve the adoption of conservation farming practices, the retirement of submarginal lands from uneconomic production to constructive use, the development of farm woodlands as an economic asset and a conservation measure, the installation of water facilities to promote sounder and more productive use of the land in semiarid sections, and the use of land treatment measures that help in controlling and preventing floods.

The objective is always one of establishing the kind of land use that will conserve the soil resource and provide a more rewarding life on the land.

The following maps show the localities in which one or more phases of this broad land-use program are now being carried forward.

SOIL CONSERVATION DISTRICTS

Under euthority of state lew, farmere in many etates have formed local organizations for community action to conserve soil resources end promote better land use. These organizations, known se Soil conservation Districts, ere social mechanisms through which the people on the land can join in a cooperative program for the conservation of soil end soil resources

The Soil Conservation Service projects ite work onto the land largely through the instrumentality of these independent local organizations, by essisting the districts in the development and execution of plens for needed land-use reforms.

DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

Large-scale demonstration projects, everaging shout 25,000 acres in size, are operated by the Service as a means of spreading conservation practices smong lend users. On each project, farmers are invited to cooperate with the Service in formulating and carrying out a complete program of soil conservation. Such a program involves treatment of the farm as a whole with such measures as may be adeptable to each component percel of land.

RESEARCH

At experiment stations and specialized research projects, the Soil Conservation Service attempts to obtain the basic information upon which sound land use practices and programs must be built.
